Have you been to Stuttgart's new city library? If not you will be amazed how much more than just books there is to see. Since the opening in Oct. 2011 it has been a sensational hit – not only for book lovers but also for people who love architecture. Designed by Korean Eun Young Yi, this is not the average public building you see every day. From mechanized carts that sort eight floors of returned media, to the self-check-out of laptops for use during the visit. During our guided tour with Ingrid Bussmann, head of the library we will discover the main aspects of its architectural concept, get an overview of their media and art supply and how to use it.
